Waterman, in Chicago Journal.

Three years more of grief and Grover.
Would to goodness they were over!
For this land its very weary of his weight of want and wee.
And we're sure but few would care if
This singled prophet of low turlif
Wete to pack his collar box to-slay and get right up and go.

All his promises are busted.
Every hope in which men trusted—
All the rainbaw-tinted mensures which he swore would make the best.
Have been toyed with to our sorrow,
And if men could vote to morrow.
They would swipe that free trade fad of his and knock it galley west.

Factories are closed and quiet;
Soup is now the proper diet,
Scores of worthy men are paupers asking alms
upon the street;
Men who in the last election
Thought that Grover was perfection,
Marched and howled and earried this banner till they'd blisters on their feet.

Yes, they've learned the lesson dearly For they now sen very clearly. That the policy he's following will wreck and discreance.

Three years more of grief and Grover
Then once more we'll be in clover
For in 1898, you be!! we'll have another change.

THE AUNT HERISSON.

[From the French of Brieux, by Carrie Louise Burn

Two young men, mounted on valuable steeds, burst into laughter as they left the Vichy road to take the one through the forest.

They certainly lacked cenerosity but Cyrille, the maid of Mademoiselle De Saint-Juirs, made an odd figure, mounted on the stiff, old mare Leda, riding behind her mistress, her silhouette was that of a war-like woman,

The young men rode past her into the forest laughing and joking.

Mademoiselle De Saint-Juirs over-heard their silly banter. She turned her horse around and waited. She was handsome. The ride, the brisk air and also the indignation hat beautified her complexion and given brilliancy to her blue eyes. Her nostrils palpitated like the heart of a wounded bird; she bit her lip and stood up in her stirrup, all trembline with anger. trembling with anger.

ner ip and stood up in her stirrup, all trembling with anger.

The young men approached her a little abashed. One of them opened his mouth, but had not time to speak before a young man rode up behind them and gave their horses two vigorous cots with a whip. Being fine animals they tore down the road on a gallop, resisting the efforts of their chagrined rulers to stop them.

"Now, consin," said the young man, saluting her, "let us return," And the ride buck to the chateau was a happy one, for George De Sernay and his cousin, Mademoisele De Saint-Jurs, were engaged, and neither doubted that the little incident was ended, not knowing how much sadness it would cause them.

The parents of the young cousin live I in a veritable chateau, but like Cyrilie and Leda it had seen better days. The gardens were dilapidated, but the interior of the castle was still very beautiful. Madame Do Saint-Jurs had died when her daughter, Marcelle, was three years old. Her sister, Herisson, had cared for the child as though she had been her own. Mademoiselle Herisson had never cared to marry. She was very pious. She was continually in a discussion with Monsieur Do Saint-Jura, because years before he had Juirs, because years before he had fought a duel in the garden behind the chateau, and she looked upon him as a criminal.

When Marcelle was twenty her aunt When Marcelle was twenty her aunt tried to induce her not to marry, but all influences were useless. Marcelle, after overcoming Aunt Herisson's numerous objections, was affianced to her cousin, George De Sernay, an amiable and brave young gentleman.

The day after the ride George was seated at a table in the Casino of Vichy, when two young men approached him.

"Well, you two converse about it, and leave me in peace."

George raised his arm but controlled himself and said between his teeth:

Cards were exchanged, the seconds conferred, swords were chosen, and the encounter to be the next day. George demanded that it should not be made public. He spent the night in writing to his parents and his finance.

It was his first duel, and he was a little atraid. The next morning at the rendezvous he found the places marked off and the referee holding the swords by the points. He presented them to

He threw himself on his adversary whose sword's point cut deep into his hand. For a few minutes there was a fist fight; then some one separated the contestants. Although George was bleeding badly he wished to continue. But his friends would not allow it. The seconds and his adversary way pale as

But his friends would not allow it. The seconds and his adversary were pale as death and all the rest except George gave a sigh of relief.

In the evening, two days later, the family were assembled in the salon of the chateau. Aunt Herisson read the newspaper. Monsieur De Saint-Juira and his daughter were making out a list for the invitations to the soirce following the betrothal. George was drinking a cup of tea. Aunt Herisson watched George and Aunt Herisson watched George and said at hat, angrily:
"Do you deny it, monsiour?"

"Then I have told you what to do,"
Marcelle commenced to sob.
"Marcelle, go to your room."
"It is not possible," said George, in a voice that was choked by tears.
"Go!"

"Go!" Marcelle went to her lover's side and Monsieur De Saint-Juirs, knowing her obstinacy, then said: "Very well. You will not stay here."

"So let it be."
But now Marcelle spoke. "If, my aunt, you will stay, I will not marry without your consent. You replace my mother, and have given me all the kind attentions of a mother. Though I will never cease to love George, I will not disobey you."

"But it is all wrong," said Monsieur DoSaint-Juirs.

"No papa, it is my duty." And the young girl broke down and hastened to her room, where she gave away to tears. George went to Paris.

Marcelle, little by little, lost her color, her animation, her life. She was failing rapidly, and it worried Aunt Harisson. Sho condided in the good old cure and the result was that Marcelle was surprised the next morning by a loving letter from George. They were now to be allowed to correspond under coyer of Monsiour Barbon in Vichy.

The letters came with perfect regularity each month, but with no postmark. Marcelle discussed this point with Cyrille, who watched one night to see the letter reached Marcelle's table in the little blue salon. She saw Mademoiselle Herisson herself put it there. This was made known to Monsieur De Saint-Juire, who arranged a little counterplot.

Tenuyson on Spring.

We have the word of Alfred Tennyson for it that in the spring the young man's fancies lightly turn to thoughts of love. It is singular that the great laureate omitted to mention the fact that it is in the spring that a considerable portion of the human race turn to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Probably nothing but the difficulty of finding a good rhyme for that invaluable remedy deterred him. Certain it is that the old-time demestic remedies are generally discarded in favor of the standard blood purifier, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has attained the greatest popularity all over the country as the invorite Spring Medicine. It purifies the blood and gives norve, mental, bodily and digestive strength. Tennyson on Spring.

A constant source of discome stroyed. A constant source of discom-fort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate broachitis, which is usually the exciting cause of pulmon-ary disease.
